

Educationally Speaking
June 2011

One measure of a school's effectiveness is the quality of post-secondary educational institutions that the high school graduates are able to attend. For the Class of 2011, Fallbrook High School students will be attending numerous prestigious universities. A number of students have been accepted at University of California schools, including UC Berkeley, UC Irvine, UC San Diego and UCLA. Many others have been accepted at California State University schools. And others have been accepted at private schools in and out of California, including Stanford University, Loyola Marymount, USC, Harvey Mudd, Cal Tech, Westmont, Brown University, Cornell University, Loyola University (Chicago), New York University, and St. John's University. In addition, students have been accepted at universities outside California such as the University of Washington, the University of Oregon, Baylor, BYU, and the U.S. Naval Academy.

These students are able to continue their education at these and many other fine institutions due to their individual knowledge, skills, and aptitude and due to the quality education opportunities provided them at Fallbrook High School. If a student earns an inferior education at Fallbrook High School, the majority of the responsibility does not lie with the school.

So, when someone asks you about the quality of education at Fallbrook High School, be a name-dropper: Stanford, Berkeley, USC, UCLA, Cal Tech, U.S. Naval Academy. And those are but a few examples from the Class of 2011. It is also true for the class of 2010, 2009, and classes before them!
